Funny Film Festival signs major sponsor

John Cowley and Son's Irish Pub, "the place where friends" meet, has signed on as Premiere Gala sponsor for this fall's Funny Film Festival, held Oct. 8-10 in downtown Farmington.

The city of Farmington is hosting the festival, which will showcase the city to movie lovers, filmmakers and industry leaders from metro Detroit, the Midwest and across the country, who will have the chance to view 40 films in three different venues and participate in a wide variety of educational and film-related workshops.

Film festival patrons will enjoy an evening of socializing with film producers, directors, writers and actors at the Oct. 8 Gala, immediately following a planned free-to-the-public outdoor viewing of a special comedy film in downtown Farmington.

"This is a demonstration of our commitment to the community and support for an event which will bring thousands of people to the city of Farmington," said

Cowley and Sons managing partner Greg Cowley.

Nemes and Anderson, Michigan's premiere entertainment law firm has signed on as a major sponsor. Purple Rose Films and Marketing Communications Counsel have committed as in-kind sponsors.

City Manager Vince Pastue said, "We are pleased to see these organization stepping up as sponsors. The Film Festival will bring some great attention to our city and show it off as a fun and friendly place."

The Farmington Funny Film Festival is a nonprofit event. Net proceeds raised from the festival will be divided between the historic Farmington Civic Theatre and the Farmington Call to Action Coalition. For more information, visit www.funnyfilms.org
